Corrosion is a natural process that occurs when a metal reacts with its environment. This reaction can be accelerated by factors such as moisture, oxygen, and pollutants. The resulting corrosion can lead to the degradation of the metal, which can be a significant problem for many applications. Understanding the factors that contribute to corrosion is essential for developing effective corrosion prevention strategies. This document provides a comprehensive overview of the corrosion process, including the underlying chemistry and the various factors that influence it. It also discusses the different types of corrosion and the methods used to prevent and control it. The information presented here is intended to provide a clear and concise understanding of corrosion and its impact on metal structures.
